Can YOU reassemble this firearm?

With these AGI Armorer's Courses on DVD you could reassemble it, repair it, clean it, tune it, and more!

At AGI we believe you can't fix it unless you truly understand HOW the firearm is intended to work. Master Gunsmith Bob Dunlap explains design and function of each model using cutaway firearms, giving you exclusive close-up views of the inside of the firearm not normally visible. You just aren't going to be able to see this anywhere else.

Each video course provides a clear visual demonstration of the intricate internal workings of the firearm, teaching you how each part is intended to function. We then guide you through the complete step-by-step disassembly, cleaning and reassembly process, troubleshooting, how to make basic repairs, provide tricks and tips, and show you how to avoid common costly mistakes. Design of the feeding and locking mechanisms, the trigger system, proper ejection, and every other function of each specific model of firearm is covered. And AGI keeps you out of trouble by telling you what parts you should never remove! Each DVD runs 90 min. to 2 hours in length and includes a printable schematic! $39.95 each plus s/h

Much More than a Magazine

If you've been with us since the days when this magazine was a fat classified-ads newspaper called Gun List, thanks! You've seen a lot of changes, including the biggest one, which was our name change to Gun Digest more than 10 years ago. If you're new to Gun Digest, you're in good company. We've added new subscribers to our roles at an unprecedented pace in the past two years.

You might not know about the many ways the Gun Digest brand benefits the firearms community. Our tagline is "We Know Guns So You Know Guns." Our mission is to bring you information on all aspects of the firearms industry. We aren't only about new guns or old guns or tactical guns or cowboy guns or...well, you get the picture. Think of this magazine as your home base to keep you tuned in to our many other platforms. Did you know:

- The Gun Digest brand dates back to 1944 when the inaugural edition of the grand Gun Digest annual—still known as "The World's Greatest Gun Book"—was born. This July, we'll publish our 70th edition, Gun Digest 2016.
- GunDigest.com should be at the top of your website bookmarks list. This is where you can keep in touch daily with breaking news, blog series, photos of new and unique guns, special offers and anything else that fuels your passion for firearms.
- Gun Digest's Facebook page now boasts more than 400,000 fans. If you're a Facebook user, even a casual one, make sure you hit "Like" so Gun Digest posts hit your newsfeed. It's a great way to keep up with new products, special deals and sweepstakes offers.

- Our Gun Digest Pinterest page has clearly struck a chord with firearms fans. We have more than 53,000 gun enthusiasts following us there.
- We have our own online store, gundigeststore.com, where you can find deals on everything from books to holsters to gun safe lights to ebooks.

As always, thanks for reading. Stick with Gun Digest and we'll continue working to make sure you know everything there is to know about the fascinating world of guns.

Mistaken Identities

I love Gun Digest, but have two points regarding the April issue. First, in the editor's letter, I noticed no mention of females in the article. Every chance I have, I encourage females to partake in the sport of shooting. I have even converted a couple of extreme anti-gun types into great shooters and advocates.

Second, in the article, "New Semi-Autos for 2015," there is a photo of the S&W M&P full size 9mm, but the write-up is about the M&P .22 Compact. I noticed since I own both guns and love them. I'm writing just in case you missed the first 1,000 letters regarding this one issue. I'm a loyal reader and keep up the great work.

—Retired Navy Capt. Terry Swinney

First, from all of us at Gun Digest, thank you for your service to our country. Second, we thank you for your loyalty as a reader of the magazine. We're grateful for the opportunity to serve you through these pages. Great catch on the M&P photo! We apologize for the mistake, but are sincerely glad that you helped us find it. As always, we are glad to serve such a passionate and knowledgeable group of readers like yourself.—Eds.

That's a Big Glock

The chart for the Glock 43 on page 13 of the April issue lists the gun at 16.19 pounds, unloaded. This is an obvious typo that got missed—it should have been ounces. The Glock 43 weighs 17.95 ounces, including magazine, according to Glock.

—John League

Fantastic catch, John! Sixteen pounds would make for quite the concealed carry gun. As you correctly stated, the Glock 43 weighs 17.95 ounces unloaded and 22.36 ounces loaded, according to Glock's website.—Eds.

The Changing Times

Congratulations. Within one year, more or less, you folks have succeeded in transforming the most reliable published source for used firearms into just another mediocre gun periodical.

—Bob Witek

We realize we can't please everyone all of the time. While classified ads have been a principal feature of this magazine since its days as Gun List, the tide of the digital age has forced a change in our approach. We regret any inconvenience this has caused some of our readers, but recent surveys reveal that the new direction is a welcome one for many. We appreciate feedback on this or any issue related to the magazine, all of which helps us improve Gun Digest for our readers.—Eds.

The Ever Popular .22

On Gun Digest's Facebook page, we recently posted a link to an article by Wayne van Zwoll, "What You Didn't Know About the .22." Our readers followed up with their thoughts on what van Zwoll referred to as perhaps the "most useful cartridge of all time."

What most don't know is that a .22 is deadly over 400 yards...don't doubt the lil guy.

—Marvin Hurt

Yeah, but who can find any .22 ammo to shoot?

—Brian Welch

The .22, it doesn't get any better, or more fun. I have always had at least one in my safe and I shoot a .22 LR frequently. I have a Savage Model 24 with .22 WMR over .410 and it's a small game master.

—Paul O'Fallon

Of all my rifles, I love my Ruger 10/22 the most.

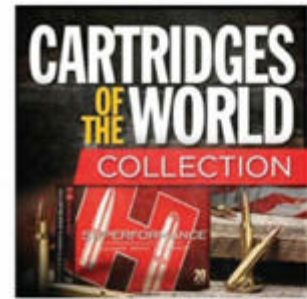

—Sonny Cortez

I have always lived by the .22. I've shot small bore rifle at Camp Perry and loved it. It's amazingly accurate in a good rifle, and while the prices have gone up, it's still relatively cheap in comparison. Long live the .22!

—Robert Duke Aquaro

Reloading Ammo: Ponderations on Progressive Presses

There comes a time for many reloaders when the volume of their ammunition needs outgrows the function of their single-stage press.

For those shooters who dispense a high volume of ammunition from their pistols, the progressive press can be a worthwhile investment.

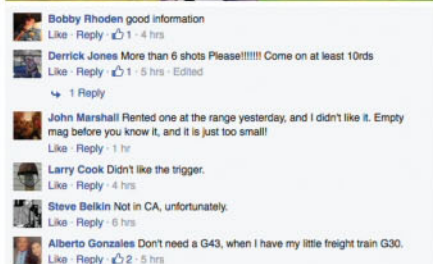

When properly adjusted, and running right, the progressive can produce several hundred rounds per hour. There are many different types to choose from, but the basic premise is the same. The idea of the progressive is to perform multiple operations with each stroke of the press.

Gunsite Big Game Hunter Prep Course

If you're serious about your chances for success, gearing up for big game hunting season takes more than a few shots at the 100-yard range from a bench just a week or two before opening day. Gunsite Academy (Gunsite.com) in Paulden, Arizona, offers the ideal training for hunters, whether you're an old pro tuning up for another adventure or a first-timer.

The Hunter Prep course can be tailored to individual and group needs and hunts, including dangerous game in Africa or elk in the Rocky Mountains. Expert instructors Mario Marchman and Il Ling New, also a professional guide in the U.S., equip you with necessary skills like mastering field positions, shooting with sticks and slings, marksmanship training, proper trigger control and executing shots on moving or charging targets.

You'll also have the opportunity to do plenty of shooting and live-fire drills at the range, including the walking simulator with one of the instructors as they guide you through different field scenarios. Replica game targets are placed in various locations along the course and have steel plates in the vital zones to help confirm hits. Not only does the course force you to utilize shooting skills in a real world scenario, it also makes for an incredibly good time with friends. As for lodgings, the Little Thumb Butte Bed & Breakfast (Littlethumb.net) provides amazing views, close proximity to Gunsite and the best home-style food you'll find in the area.

Gunsite instructor Il Ling New uses a remote-controlled deer target to teach shooters the fundamentals of making a shot on a moving target in Paulden, Arizona.

IN THE NEWS

Country Music Controversy

Country music star Tim McGraw sparked controversy in mid-April when he announced he'd be playing a benefit concert in Connecticut to support Sandy Hook Promise (SHP), a group formed in response to the 2012 school shooting in Newtown. SHP claims to be "above-the-politics," while the Associated Press has labeled it a "gun control group" and pointed out that SHP has actively "lobbied for tighter restrictions on guns."

Kroger Stands Firm

In an April interview with CNBC's "Squawk Box," Kroger Senior Vice President and CFO Michael Schlotman backed his company's stance of allowing open carry within Kroger stores in states where the practice is legal. "If the local gun laws are to allow open carry, we'll certainly allow customers to do that based on what the local laws are. We don't believe it's up to us to legislate what the local gun control laws should be," Schlotman said.

Montana Gets Suppressed

After vetoing the original NRA-sponsored Senate Bill 295, Montana Gov. Steve Bullock eventually signed House Bill 250, which legalizes the use of suppressors for hunting. While some of the language of HB 250 differs from the original bill, the effect is practically the same: it is now permissible to hunt in Montana with legally owned suppressors. The bill takes effect immediately, which could make for a quieter 2015 season.

THE 5-MINUTE MARKSMAN

Master the Kneeling Position

While much of the preseason tuning up we do as hunters happens at the range from a bench, likely at 100 yards on a paper target, it's important that our big game training matches what we'll face in the field. Especially when hunting in the wide-open spaces of the West, it's imperative to come ready to shoot from a variety of field positions at various ranges out to 200 or 300 yards. You can't really know your maximum effective range from each position until you've practiced shooting from each of them, so training is obviously paramount.

One of the most effective is the kneeling position. It's relatively quick and easy to get into, requires fairly minimal flexibility and allows the hunter to keep the rifle in a ready position while standing up. In turn, this provides for quick follow-up shots without taking your eyes off the animal.

To get into the kneeling position, start with your feet shoulder width apart, facing your target. Place your left foot in front of your body, toes toward the target, and drop to your right knee. Lower your torso into a rigid posture as you sit against your rear leg (your legs should now be perpendicular to each other). Place the back of your left arm against the front of your left knee, avoiding the unstable bone-on-bone contact that happens if you perch your elbow atop your knee. To get out of the kneeling position, simply rise up with the rifle in the ready position, muzzle at eye level, giving yourself the chance to make a quick follow-up shot as necessary.

ARMED & COURAGEOUS

Uber Driver Thwarts Chicago Gunman

The Chicago Tribune reported on April 20 that a legally armed Uber driver shot and wounded a gunman who had opened fire on a crowd in Logan Square. According to Assistant State's Attorney Barry Quinn, the driver had a concealed carry permit and acted in defense of himself and others. Quinn said a group of people had been walking in front of the driver at about midnight when Everardo Custodio, 22, opened fire on the crowd. Police reported that the driver got out of his vehicle and fired six shots from his handgun, striking Custodio, who was taken to the hospital with multiple gunshot wounds to the lower body and abdomen. No other injuries were reported from the incident.

Step Away From the Pizza

Gary Royer, a gun owner and pizza deliveryman, was in the process of delivering a pizza in Douglas, Georgia, when Antavious McTear approached him with a metal bar and demanded he hand over his money. According to local police reports, Royer drew his weapon and pointed it at McTear, who then ran to his car and drove away. Police apprehended McTear a short time later and booked him into the Coffee County jail. GDTM

.375 Holland & Holland Magnum

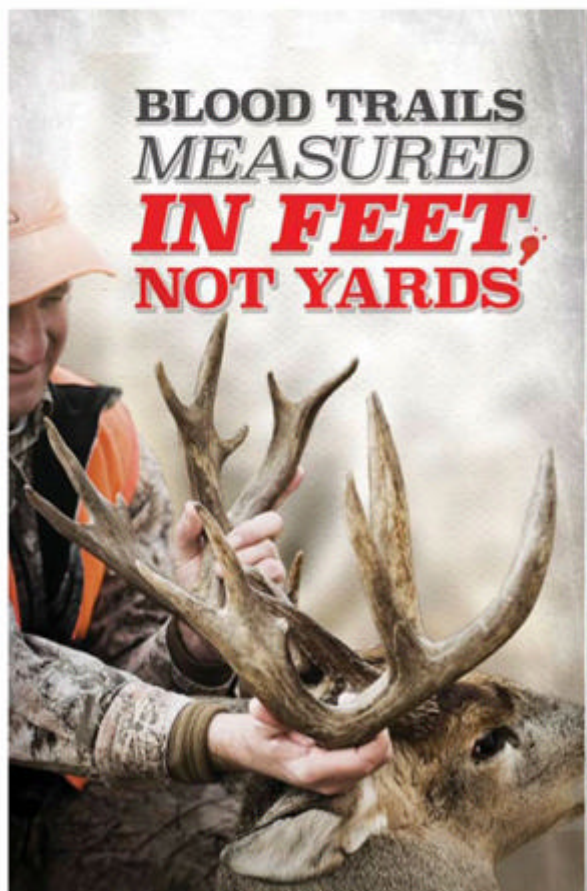

Originated by the British firm Holland & Holland in 1912, this is one of the original belted, rimless, magnum-type cartridges. It has been used as the basis for numerous wildcats and most of the Weatherby cartridges. H&H furnished it in a magnum Mauser action, and Griffin & Howe chambered rifles for it, beginning about 1926. The Western Cartridge Co. first offered it in 1925. At present, Federal, Remington and Winchester load the .375. The first commercial rifle of American make to chamber the round was the Model 70 Winchester, in 1937. Weatherby rifles were at one time available in .375 H&H, as was the Remington Model 725 Kodiak. At present, several American manufacturers list the .375 H&H as standard including Ruger, Winchester and Remington.

Long considered the best all-round African caliber, the .375 H&H is overpowered for North American big game. However, many Alaskan hunters and guides prefer it for moose and grizzly bear. It isn't a very flexible cartridge for the American hunter, unless one expects to hunt the heaviest species and spend time in Africa or Asia. John Taylor, in his 1948 book "African Rifles and Cartridges," rates the .375 as the best of the medium bores for African hunting. GDTM

Manufacturers have rolled out a wide range of new ammo choices for every shooter under the big, bright sun.

ROBERT SADOWSKI & DOUG HOWLETT

Hot New Ammo & Loads for 2015

Your firearm is only as good as the ammunition it shoots. The new cartridges and shells offered this year by manufacturers are purpose built to do a specific job—drop mallards, kill pigs, train defensively and more. Let's take a deeper dive into what's new.

HPR

BLACK OPS

In what has to be some of the coolest packaging on the shelf, HPR brought their Black Ops line to market in an effort to deliver a premium line of defensive ammo with maximum knockdown power. The line features the Open Tipped Frangible (OTF) bullet, the core and jacket of which separate upon impact for 100-percent transfer of energy into the target. The lead-free rounds come in 9mm, .40 S&W, .45 Auto, and for those who prefer a tactical long gun, it is available in .223 Rem. hprammo.com

VOR-TX LOADS FOR ARs & LONG RANGE HUNTING

The VOR-TX line is loaded with Barnes' all-copper bullet. These bullets offer excellent penetration and virtually 100-percent weight retention. Upon impact the bullet expands to double its diameter. The new hunting loads include two new 5.56mm cartridges with either a 62- or 70-grain TSX bullet. For AR shooters who prefer the .30 caliber, the .300 ACC BLK is available with a 120-grain TAC-TX bullet. For those going long range, the .338 Lapua Mag. comes loaded with a 280-grain LRX bullet that offers excellent performance at long distances. barnesbullets.com

BLACK HILLS

69- & 70-GRAIN 5.56MM

Black Hills has two new additions to its 5.56mm lineup, including a 69-grain TMK bullet with a very slippery .375 BC, which is the ballistic equivalent of the standard 77-grain bullet but with a higher velocity. The other 5.56mm is a barrier blind round that uses a 70-grain Hornady GMX bullet designed for better penetration. This round performs best in rifles with 1:7- or 1:8-inch twist rates. black-hills.com

ATLANTA ARMS

.40 S&W & .45 ACP

Specializing in remanufactured and match ammunition, Atlanta Arms debuted its Target/Defense handgun ammunition line with two new caliber offerings: a 180-grain hollow point in .40 S&W and a 230-grain hollow point in .45 ACP. This cost-friendly ammunition allows shooters to train with the same rounds they use for concealed carry. atlantaarms.com

BLACK HILLS

GOLD .308 WIN.

The Black Hills Gold line now includes another .308 Win. cartridge loaded with a 168-grain Sierra TMK bullet, which has an improved BC for higher retained velocity, better wind performance and a flatter trajectory. Black Hills factory-rated velocity is 2,650 fps with 2,619 ft-lbs. of muzzle energy. black-hills.com

FEDERAL PREMIUM

AMERICAN EAGLE .17 WSM

The .17 WSM in the American Eagle line offers a tipped 20-grain varmint bullet that delivers 3,000 fps, perfect for providing explosive expansion on varmints and predators at considerable distances. With minimal wind drift, screaming velocity and effectiveness out to at least 200 yards on varmints, the American Eagle .17 WSM is one tough cartridge to beat. Look out, varmints. federalpremium.com

AMERICAN EAGLE BULK PACK 5.56MM NATO

Proper AR training requires buckets of ammo. The value-priced American Eagle line offers high-volume shooters two new bulk packs of 5.56mm NATO, including a 120-round re-sealable plastic can with either 55-grain or 62-grain FMJ bullets, or a military-style cardboard carton holding 150 rounds of 62-grain FMJ ammo. federalpremium.com

NITRO STEEL

Remington ups the velocity ante in steel shot with 2¾-, 3- and 3½-inch shells in 10, 12, 16 and 20 gauge. The zinc-plated pellets are 100 percent round so they fly straight and deliver more energy to knock down birds. The new shells come in shot sizes from BBB and BB to 1, 2, 3 and 4. remington.com

WINCHESTER

LONG BEARD XR

No longer is a wily tom going to be just out of range. The Long Beard XR extends the lethal turkey range out to 60 yards. Two new 12-gauge loads, a 3-inch shell loaded with 1 7/8 ounces of shot and a 3½-inch shell loaded with 2 1/8 ounces of shot both clock at 1,050 fps. Both loads are available in No. 4, No. 5 and No. 6 shot. winchester.com

AMERICAN WHITETAIL SLUGS

Hornady's American Whitetail line now offers a 12-gauge rifled slug that turns your smooth bore shotgun into a deer slayer. The 1-ounce, foster-style rifled hollow point slug is constructed of a tough lead-alloy core and has a muzzle velocity of 1,600 fps. The compression style wall helps seal the bore for maximum velocity while protecting the slug at ignition. hornady.com

W TRAIN & DEFEND .45 ACP

Always an innovator, Winchester's W Train & Defend line in .45 ACP gives concealed carry permit holders a way to practice—the "train" portion of the tagline—and a way to defend with two ballistically matched .45 ACP loads. The range-ready training ammo features a 230-grain FMJ practice round and 230-grain HP personal defense hollow-point. Since both rounds are a ballistic match, they shoot to the same point of aim and have the same recoil. winchester.com

CRITICAL DEFENSE LITE 9MM

Hornady's new Critical Defense Lite in 9mm offers an effective, reduced-recoil option for lightweight, compact pistols and for shooters who are sensitive to recoil. The cartridge is loaded with a 100-grain FTX bullet with a pink polymer tip that offers a 27-percent reduction in recoil. A portion of the proceeds from the Critical Defense Lite goes to help fund breast cancer research. hornady.com

SIG SAUER

10MM ELITE PERFORMANCE

The 10mm is enjoying a resurgence of late, and SIG Elite Performance ammunition joins other ammo companies in delivering a powerful new option—two actually—for fans of the caliber. Adopting matched train and carry loads, SIG now offers a 180-grain 10mm Elite Performance V-Crown JHP with a 180-grain FMJ target load. sigsauer.com GDTM

What is a MAGNUM?

When it comes to defining magnums, it's not as straightforward as you might think. JON R. SUNDRA

The .30-06 (second from left) set the “standard” for .30 caliber velocity. The smaller and more efficient .308 Win. next to it comes very close to matching it, while the others—the .300 Win., .300 Rem. Ultra, 7.82 Lazzeroni Warbird and .30-378 Wby. exceed it incrementally.

There was a time when the term “magnum” was fairly well defined. I’m talking back in the 1960s and 70s when the word pretty much meant a cartridge more powerful than “normal” and was usually based on the belted Holland & Holland case. In fact, in the eyes of many, if it didn’t have a belt, it couldn’t be a magnum—that’s how synonymous the two words became. As always, though, there were many exceptions to the rule. Back in its early days as a wildcat, for example, the .25-06 certainly provided magnum performance if the standard for the caliber was the .257 Roberts. Yet it was never called a magnum.

At the other end of the .25-caliber spectrum was the .256 Win. Mag., a bastard of a cartridge if ever there was one. Originally designed as a pistol cartridge, what limited popularity it achieved was in the Marlin Model 62 Levermatic rifle. Based on the .357 Mag. pistol case necked down to .25 caliber, as a rifle cartridge it was pitiful, sending a 60-grain bullet of low sectional density and ballistic coefficient at 2,760 fps. If we again cite the .257 Roberts as representing the performance standard for the caliber, it would have qualified as a super magnum compared to the .256. Incidentally, I actually owned one of those Marlin Levermatics, and the .256 Win. Mag. was the cartridge with which I started my handloading career.

Anyway, another and even better example of confusing nomenclature is the .220 Swift. When it was introduced in 1932, it absolutely blew the doors off any other .22 centerfire cartridge, yet like the .25-06, it never received the magnum imprimatur. Even when the .222 Rem. Mag. was introduced in 1958, the Swift pushed the same weight bullets about 500 fps faster, yet it was...well, just a Swift, not a magnum.

Like I said, there are many exceptions to the rule, but for the most part there was some thread of consistency throughout cartridge nomenclature. I guess when you get right down to it, a cartridge is regarded as a “magnum” if its performance—usually based on velocity, but not always, as in the case of shotshells—is higher than the nominal standard. Today we have many true magnums that have no belt, plus

Despite lacking the “magnum” designation, the 7.82 Lazzeroni Warbird (center) and the .460 Dakota qualify in spades. Shown for comparison sake is the .30-06 at left.

The .30-06-based .280 Rem. (second from left) represents standard velocity for the 7mm caliber. Like the .30 family, the smaller .308 Win. based 7mm-08 next to it comes close to matching the .280, while the belted 7mm Rem. and 7mm Ultra Mag provide one and two levels of performance above it.

In its early days as a wildcat, the .25-06 (third from left) was a genuine magnum compared to the .257 Roberts next to it. That said, the belted .257 Wea. qualifies as an "ultra" magnum. At far left is the .256 Win. Mag., a "magnum" in name only.

we have short magnums, ultra magnums and "enhanced performance" cartridges, so determining what those standards are is a lot more confusing than it used to be.

I do think, however, we would all agree that the performance "standard" for our two most popular hunting calibers, the 7mm and .30, are represented by the .280 Rem. and the .30-06. In other words, a muzzle velocity of around 2,800-2,850 fps for a 150-grain 7mm bullet, and 2,750 or thereabouts for a 180-grain bullet in a .30-06, represent "standard" cartridge performance for those respective calibers. Any cartridge that increases those nominal velocities by 150-200 fps would qualify as a magnum, whether they're called that or not. Continuing that thread, the 7mm Rem. and .300 Win. best exemplify what most of us mean by "magnum" in those respective calibers. Of course we now have the 7mm and .300 WSM, which duplicate the aforementioned rounds, but you can follow is the one you make.*

*In a wild, untouched vastness, the only path

And the only thing that will lead you is intuition. Ours led us to handcrafting ammunition—slowly. In America. With a laborious, obsessive hand inspection process. There are tried and true ways to manufacture ammunition efficiently...so we've heard. But in 34 years, we've only found one way to make the best ammunition on earth. Ours.

with a shorter, squatter case, and without that once almost-mandatory appendage known as a belt.

Then we have in those same two calibers the 7mm and .300 Remington Ultra Magnum, both of which deserve that superlative moniker because they do indeed provide another significant step up in performance over "standard magnums," if you will, which has to qualify as an oxymoron if ever there was one.

Boosting Velocities

What in recent years has further blurred the lines between standard, magnum and ultra magnum performance is best characterized by Hornady's original Light Magnum line of enhanced performance ammunition. By using proprietary loading procedures and propellants specifically formulated for them, Hornady was able to boost velocities in non-magnum cartridges by as much as 140 fps over the nominal standards, with no increase in pressures. After a couple of years, Hornady applied that same technology to magnum calibers, but it felt it had to somehow distinguish it from non-magnum calibers, so it was called Heavy Magnum, even though the velocity gains averaged about the same.

For example, the Light Magnum 165-grain .308 Win. load clocked 2,840 fps compared to 2,700 for the standard loading. In .300 Win. Mag. the Heavy Magnum load exited at 3,120 fps, or 170 fps over the standard load. Thankfully, the folks at Hornady realized the potential for confusion and have since chosen to change the name to Superformance, and it applies to all such enhanced loadings, whether magnums or not.

Further blurring the lines between standard and magnum performance is that Hornady has applied this same technology in its development of proprietary cartridge lines for Ruger, Thompson/Center and Marlin. The Ruger Compact Magnums, the .300 and .338 T/C, and the .300 and .338 Marlin Express, are all examples of cartridges that provide significantly more velocity than they could otherwise given their case capacities.

Even more dramatic, though, is the performance gains achieved when these same loading techniques are applied to classic lever-action cartridges like the .30-30, .35 Rem., .444 Marlin and .450 Marlin in conjunction with Hornady's development of FlexTip bullets. The overall performance of these old guns have been elevated to where they would qualify as "magnums" when compared to the standard loadings and the flat- or round-nosed bullets these guns were traditionally saddled with.

No sir, the term "magnum" doesn't have quite the same connotations it once did. There are cartridges today that produce magnum and even super-magnum performance, yet are not so designated—the 7.82 Lazzeroni Warbird and .460 Dakota are consummate examples. Then there are those that wear a belt and don't qualify, such as the 6.5 and .350 Rem. Mag.; they only duplicate, if that, the performance of the 6.5-06 wildcat and the .35 Whelen, respectively. GDTM

From the sublime to the ridiculous, the highly efficient .308 Win. stands next to the enormous 7.82 Battlestar, a grossly inefficient cartridge that thankfully John Lazzeroni chose not to put into production. Talk about a magnum!

LEFT: Hornady's Light and Heavy Magnum ammo (now known simply as "Superformance") blurred the lines between standard and magnum ballistics. RIGHT: Though bearing the "magnum" suffix and wearing belts, the 6.5 and .350 Rem. Magnums were really not magnums because they didn't surpass the performance of their .30-06-based equivalents, the 6.5-06 or .35 Whelen.

The Cutting Edge

CEB's solid copper bullets are ideal for long-range competition and hunting.

MAX PRASAC

Relative newcomer Cutting Edge Bullets (CEB) is manufacturing premium solid copper and brass projectiles for many different applications. CEB's stated goal is to produce a single projectile that can be used in a variety of circumstances and perform equally well.

This no-compromise mantra has led to bullet designs that shoot flat and accurately and are terminally effective on game. CEB is for the match shooter and hunter who wants a bullet of the highest quality without compromise. CEB's products are precision machined to very tight tolerances and held to the highest standards of manufacturing.

CEB's solid copper bullets feature a unique and patented SealTite band that eliminates the possibility of "fliers" that are sometimes associated with other solid copper bullets. This makes them ideal for long-range competition and hunting. This band design also significantly reduces copper fouling. A number of solid brass bullets are also available for rifle shooters that seek ultra-deep penetration and unmatched terminal performance. CEB offers bullets for the diminutive .223 Rem. all the way to the .600 Nitro Express.

CEB also has a line of defensive handgun ammunition in the most popular calibers (.380, 9mm, .40 S&W and .45 ACP), loaded with their own Raptor bullets. This is particularly useful for the enthusiast who doesn't reload.

Big-game hunting, however, is where CEB really shines. Its designs have been thoroughly vetted and independently tested for terminal effectiveness in both the lab and, more importantly, the field. The big-game rifle hunter is well served by CEB's extensive line of bullets in all popular, and some not-so-popular, calibers.

for better options. CEB offers three different bullet weights for the .480 Ruger, a 220-grain hollow point Raptor, a 280-grain Raptor and a 340-grain flat-nosed solid. CEB's bullets perform consistently and reliably. The four petals are designed to break off in animal tissue, taking off in four directions and wreaking havoc, while the solid shank continues on its forward path, penetrating deeply.

The author explains how sectional density should impact bullet selection.

PHILIP MASSARO

The Truth About Sectional Density

There are many attributes that ballistic scientists use to describe the physical properties of a bullet, and one that can matter most to a hunter is sectional density. Explained simply, sectional density (SD) is a measurement of the ratio of bullet weight to caliber (diameter of the bullet). Within any given caliber, there are bullets of varying weight, and since the diameter of the bullet cannot vary, in order to change the bullet's weight it must be made either longer or shorter.

The SD of any bullet is represented as a decimal figure, an integer less than 1. It is derived from the following ratio: the weight of the bullet (in pounds), divided by the squared diameter of the bullet (in inches). To aid you in your calculations, and avoid the need for breaking out the abacus, there are 7,000 grains in a pound.

Here's an example: we can easily figure the SD of a standard .30 caliber, 180-grain bullet. Divide 180 by 7,000 to convert to pounds, which leaves you with .025714 pounds. Square the bullet diameter of .308 inches and you'll get .094864. Divide the first number by the second and you will arrive at an SD of .271.

This formula works with any bullet, regardless of nose profile, because it is simply a ratio of weight to caliber. So, what do we do with the number once we've got it? How is it useful to a hunter?

The SD of a particular bullet can be a very useful indicator of how well the bullet will penetrate upon striking a game animal. The higher the SD, the longer the bullet will be, and longer bullets have been proven to penetrate deeper than their shorter-for-caliber counterparts. In the traditional cup and core design, the frontal portion of the bullet will upset, or expand, so a longer bullet will retain more of the shank portion for deep penetration. This can be crucial when the game animals increase in size and you're hunting with a caliber that could be considered marginal.

For instance, that same .308 bullet, in let's say the venerable .30-06 Springfield that we all know so well, will work just fine on deer sized game with a 150-grain bullet. But bump the quarry up to elk-sized game, and the classic recommendation has been a 180-grain projectile. Here's the skinny: the 150-grain bullet has an SD of .226, while the 180 yields the aforementioned SD of .271. You can sort of gauge the potential penetration and game handling abilities by taking a gander at the SD of the bullet in your chosen caliber.

For decades, the accepted minimum SD for dangerous game has been .300 to ensure that the bullet will properly penetrate thick hides and heavy bone. Depending on the situation at hand, the construction of the bullet and the caliber you are using, knowing the SD of your bullet will engender a ton of confidence, especially on those less than perfect shots that often present themselves.

Rule Revision

I'll be the first one to admit that the changes in bullet technology have revised the rules. Mono-metal construction and bonded core technology have allowed hunters to get unprecedented performance from bullets that would have earlier been deemed too light for caliber. The Barnes TSX, Swift A-Frame, Hornady DGX and Trophy Bonded Bear Claw have all given wonderful results with lower SD bullets. Read the testimonials, but use your head, and carry the ammunition that makes the most sense to you.

But what happens to a bullet once it strikes game and expands on contact? If the measure of SD is a ratio of the bullet's weight to its caliber, once the bullet expands, the diameter must increase. Therefore, the SD must drop off accordingly. The expansion of the bullet is often what causes hemorrhaging and destroys the blood rich organs, ultimately causing death, but if the bullet expands too much or too quickly, the penetration can suffer.

This penetration, which ensures that all the vital organs are hit, is the reason that so many African PHs required their clients to use solids, or bullets with no exposed lead, that would not expand at all and guarantee full body penetration on the enormous beasts that roam the African continent.

In a perfect world, a bullet would penetrate enough to destroy all the vitals for the length and breadth of the animal, while giving great expansion that would cut a huge swath through the vital organs. There are many bullets that can give a wonderful blend of the two attributes, and they have earned the reputation to go along with that performance.

I have come across a company whose bullets combine the qualities of expansion to impart a large impact wound and yet give the deep penetration of the solids used for dangerous

Changes in bullet technology have revised the rules of sectional density. Mono-metal construction and bonded core technology allow hunters to get maximum performance from lighter bullets. Author photo game. However, these bullets bring a new concept to the table. Cutting Edge Bullets (CEB, see page 28) produces a mono-metal projectile with a deep hollow point that performs differently than other bullets. Upon impact, the nose section of the bullet that has been scored parallel to the direction of the bore breaks into small "blades" that migrate away from the solid copper shank in a radial direction. This creates a small entry wound on the surface that gets bigger as the blades cut into flesh. These copper blades have shown penetration of 5 to 6 inches in ballistic gelatin, and even more on game animals. The interesting part is what happens once the blades break off. The remaining portion of the bullet, retaining 65-75 percent of its weight, drives through the animal much like a solid. The "slug," if you will, does not expand at all; it remains the original caliber dimension.

I'll reiterate: if SD is a ratio of bullet weight to diameter, then once a bullet expands, it must lose SD, by simple definition. But at the same time we want expansion to create the wound trauma that causes the game to lose massive amounts of blood. The CEB design gives both.

Mushrooming Cup & Core

Let's do a comparison, using the same .30-caliber, 180-grain bullet and a hypothetical expansion scenario. We can look at a standard cup and core, a mono-metal bullet, and the CEB. They all start out with a SD of .271, but upon impact the cup and core will mushroom to 1½ to 2 times its diameter, and generally retain 50-75 percent of its weight. The mono-metal can retain almost 100 percent of its weight, and although it doesn't form a perfect mushroom, it can expand up to 2 times its diameter.

Using these figures and a conservative value of 65 percent weight retention for the CEB, the results are as follows: The cup and core bullet has a retained SD of .060, the mono-metal bullet has an SD of .120 after expansion, and the "slug" that remains of the CEB (117 grains) has a SD of .176. That is an appreciable difference. Granted, it is mostly due to the fact that the CEB "slug" doesn't expand, but that is an integral part of the bullet design.

There is another way to look at the idea of retained SD. If we accept the fact that a certain weight of cup and core bullets will effectively kill game, based on its expansion and penetration characteristics, we can adjust the bullet weight down if we choose a bullet that will give a similar or better, retained SD.

Using the same .308-inch diameter, the CEB 130-grain bullet, which will retain 71 percent of its weight after the blade breaks off, has a retained SD of .139, giving it a theoretical advantage over the 180-grain cup and core after impact. This idea has been proven with mono-metal bullets of other makes, and many of the bonded core designs that have routinely outperformed their cup and core siblings.

The same concept applies to the pistol bullet world: the bullets that have a balance of expansion and good penetration will leave you sleeping easier at night. Those involved in law enforcement who need to be concerned with over-penetration usually look to pistol bullets with lower SD figures to ensure that the bullets will not exit. If you are so inclined to use your handgun for hunting, the SD values of the pistol bullet becomes even more crucial.

Take a good look at the SD values for the bullets available in your favorite caliber, and you'll be able to better choose which type and weight of bullet will best suit your hunting and shooting needs. GDTM

ABM Ammunition

Handloading is no longer the only option for Berger Bullets.

PHILIP MASSARO

For years, Berger Bullets have offered handloaders one of the best component bullets on the market. World-renowned for its match-grade projectile and built for target precision and hunting capability, it has solidified its position in the shooting world. The only issue with these fantastic bullets, until now, is that handloading has been the only option. All that has changed with the announcement of Applied Ballistic Munitions (ABM) ammunition.

Ballistician Bryan Litz, who has been responsible for many of the great new Berger bullet designs, has helped to develop the load data for the entire line of ammunition and has done a fine job. There are three lines of ABM Ammunition: Hunt Ready, Match Ready and Mission Ready. ABM ammo comes in just three calibers: .308 Win., .300 Win. Mag. and .338 Lapua. All three are wonderful calibers, and the bullet choices available are fantastic.

When my wife Suzie saw the Hunt Ready .308 Win. ammo with the 168-grain Berger Match Classic Hunter hollow point boat tail, she demanded to try them for deer season, effectively abandoning the handload I developed for her. They shot very well in her Savage Lady Hunter, less than MOA. ABM uses the finest components, including Lapua cases for the .308.

The .300 Win. Mag. Hunt Ready series is loaded with the 168-grain Classic Hunter, as well as a 185-grain Berger Match Classic Hunter, which is a great choice of bullet weight for the cartridge. This would make a great choice for long-range elk or moose, as the high ballistic coefficient of the 185-grain bullet (.547) will definitely help to flatten the trajectory and retain all sorts of energy. With a muzzle velocity of 3,079 fps, this sleek bullet is still cooking along at over 2,400 fps at 400 yards. The .300 Winchester line is loaded into ABM's own head-stamped brass.

Should you choose to use the behemoth .338 Lapua as a hunting round, ABM has something for you as well. Both the 250-grain and 300-grain Berger Match Elite Hunter are offered in the Hunt Ready line. That 300-grain bullet leaves the muzzle at 2,725 fps to deliver a kinetic energy of just under 4,950 ft.-lbs., which will handle all but the biggest beasts on earth.

Shooting Cloverleaf Groups

If you prefer to hunt paper instead of game animals, the Berger line has a formidable track record. Those rockin' J4 jackets have been producing tiny little cloverleaf groups for decades, and the Match Ready line of ABM ammunition delivers the same goods. The .308 Win. is loaded with a 155.5-grain (that's not a typo, the tolerances are that tight) Berger Match Fullbore Target bullet at a muzzle velocity that clocked 2,725 fps from our hunting grade rifle, but will give much better results from longer barreled target rifles. It was also plenty accurate, giving sub-MOA results.

Is Tactical your game? Do you bleed OD green? ABM has got you covered. The Mission Ready series is perfect for sniper training or for all that long-range work we love so much. The .308 load features the 175-grain OTM Tactical bullet, with a bit of a shortened profile and thicker jacket, and it shoots wonderfully. The .300 Win. Mission ready is my favorite. There are two loads: a 185-grain Berger Match Juggernaut OTM Tactical, and the awesome 230-grain Berger Match Hybrid Target. The latter bullet leaves the muzzle at over 2,800 fps; I'm really not sure how they do that. Nonetheless, they pack one hell of a punch, and the loads we tested, albeit in my friend Col. Le Frogg's Ruger No. 1, gave 5/8-inch groups at 100 yards. In the words of Darth Vader, "Impressive. Most impressive."

The Mission Ready .338 Lapua loads are stuffed with a 300-grain Berger Match Hybrid OTM Tactical bullet, which is a fine choice for shooting at the longest targets. I'll go on record as saying the .338 Lapua is not a cartridge for everybody, especially if your rifle is not equipped with a muzzle brake. But if you can shoot that beast, it has been an extremely accurate affair in my experience. These are also loaded into Lapua brass cases, nicely annealed and finely crafted.

While inspecting the ABM ammo, one of the first things I noticed was how uniform the cartridges were. I handload many thousands of rounds per year, so visual inspection is nothing new here, but micrometers don't lie. The tolerances that ABM holds are impressive, and all of the rounds we used had no feeding problems whatsoever. Historically speaking, the Berger J4 jackets have given an unprecedented level of concentricity, to the point where custom bullet makers routinely purchase jackets from Berger. I've shot some of those custom bullets and they are a testament to the quality of Berger J4s.

Recoil on the .308 and .300 loads were acceptable (although the 230-grain .300 Win. Mag. did immediately grab Le Frogg's attention), but unfortunately we didn't have a test rifle for the .338 Lapua. It's a shame, as I was immediately impressed with those long, sleek Berger bullets sitting so happily in Lapua's own .338 brass. Based on the cool factor of the ABM .338 Lapua ammo, I may just have to remedy that. GDTM

With over a century of expertise, Winchester continues as a leader in innovation.

ROBERT SADOWSKI

Legendary Winchester Performance

Winchester's iconic reputation arguably began in 1873 with the introduction of the Model 1873 rifle. A rifle is only as good as the cartridge it's chambered for, however, which is why the 1873 owes much of its status to the .44-40 cartridge.

The .44 Winchester, most commonly known as the .44-40, was the company's first metallic center-fire cartridge and was loaded with a .427-inch-diameter, 200-grain flat-point bullet over 40 grains of black powder. It was the standard chambering in the 73 lever-action and became one of the most popular rounds ever. Hunters, lawmen and desperados alike utilized the round. This once ubiquitous cartridge was the forerunner of others developed by Winchester that set the benchmark today for accuracy, power and performance.

Later cartridges included the .38-40 WCF in 1874 and the .32-20 WCF in 1882, both of which were chambered for revolvers and lever-action rifles and were popular among cowboys of the day. The .45-75 Win. was designed for use in the Model 1876 rifle. The .38-55 Win. came in 1884 and was designed by the Ballard rifle company and popularized by Winchester. I know an old timer who still uses this round for whitetail deer. The .38-56 WCF was designed for use in the big-bore 1886 lever-action rifle.

Before the century turned, one of the most famous and ground-breaking hunting cartridges was introduced in 1895, the .30 WCF, or as it is commonly known to most deer hunters, the venerable .30-30. This was Winchester's first metallic cartridge to use smokeless powder and was introduced along with the Winchester 1894, or Model 94, lever-action rifle. The cartridge is still popular today and chambered mostly in lever-action rifles from a variety of manufacturers. On the heels of the .30-30 was the .25-35 WCF in 1895, which is a .30-30 case necked down to .25 caliber. Necked up for the .32-caliber was the .32-30 Winchester Special in 1901.

President Theodore Roosevelt praised Winchester rifles and ammunition, while he used a Winchester Model 1895—a lever-action with a box magazine—chambered in .405 Win. for his East African safari starting in 1909. Roosevelt called the 1895 his “big medicine gun for lion.”

Winchester's lever-action rifles and cartridges were closely entwined. Many rifles debuted with a new cartridge, but the tubular lever-action design meant round-nosed bullets were necessary, while spitzer or spire point bullets were becoming the choice for military forces around the world. These bullets have better aerodynamics, better ballistic coefficients and deliver more energy to a target. Semi-automatic rifles in the early 20th century were popular, and Winchester built rifles and cartridges for these rifles.

Not all of Winchester's cartridge designs survive. The .33 Winchester and .35 Winchester both debuted in 1902 and 1903, respectively, and are now considered collector's items. After World War I, U.S. troops became enamored with the bolt-action rifle. The Enfield 1917 and Springfield 1903 chambered in .30-06 were Uncle Sam's combat rifles at the time. Sporterized military rifles began showing up in deer camp, and soon Winchester was designing cartridges for bolt-action rifles. Self-loading or semi-automatic rifles were the future weapons used in war and for law enforcement, which translated to their popularity for hunters.

Winchester struck pay dirt in 1923 by necking down the .30-06 cartridge to accept a .277-diameter bullet. The company debuted the new cartridge, the .270 Win., in the new Model 54 bolt-action. America soon fell in love with the cartridge and the rifle. Famous gun writer Jack O'Connor is credited with making the .270 Win. popular, as his hunting exploits with the round were well read in magazines of the era. Today the round would make the Top 5 list of best hunting cartridges as it offers flat trajectory and less recoil than the also-popular .30-06.

The 1930s were a time when wildcatters thrived, taking older black powder rounds and converting them into high-velocity marvels using new bullet designs and smokeless powder. The .218 Bee is an example of a necked down .25-20 WCF cartridge that accepts a .224-diameter bullet. The .219

Zipper is a .30-30 case necked down for a .22 caliber bullet.

Fastest Commercial Cartridge

In 1935 the .220 Swift debuted with a blistering 4,000 fps, which at the time was the fastest commercial cartridge available. It burns through a high dose of powder that causes high temperatures, bore erosion and decreased accuracy but is a popular choice for varmint hunters nonetheless. The .22 Hornet was a wildcat that Winchester turned into a factory production in 1930. No factory-built guns were made for the new round until two years later. It is currently the smallest center-fire factory cartridge available and fills the gap between rimfire .22 ammo and more powerful .22-caliber centerfire rounds.

During the 1940s, Winchester and others supplied the U.S. Government with munitions for World War II. Uncle Sam gave Winchester a project to develop a light rifle cartridge that spanned the gap between the .45 ACP pistol round and the .30-06 round. The .30 Carbine was developed for the M1 Carbine, which went on to become the most produced of all U.S. Military rifles. The M1 Carbine was used in WW II, as well as the Korean and Vietnam Wars. The .30 Carbine was based on the old .32 Win. self-loading cartridge.

In 1952 the .308 Win. was developed as a hunting round for short-action rifles and soon found favor with the military as the 7.62x51mm NATO. This round is easily a favorite of hunters, target shooters and snipers. The U.S. Military adopted the M14 rifle and 7.62x51mm as a replacement for .30-06 M1 Garand in 1954. The next year Winchester necked down the .308 and debuted the .243 Win., a light-recoiling round for short-action bolt-action rifles. The round is well suited for varmint and medium size game, especially deer.

At one time hunting the Dark Continent meant using a Model 70 rifle chambered in .458 Win. Mag. Introduced in 1956, the .458 Win. Mag. was designed for a bolt-action rifle and big-bore double rifles. To compete against the .375 H&H Magnum, Winchester introduced the .338 Win. Mag. in 1958. It is popular as a dangerous bear cartridge and for African plains game.

The flat-shooting .300 Win. Mag. debuted in 1963 with both hunters and competition shooters admiring its super flat trajectory, power and accuracy. The .284 Winchester is good example of a great cartridge that was initially not popular. When it debuted in 1963 it was greeted with a yawn, but in most recent years the .284 Win. has resurged in popularity among long-range competitive shooters.

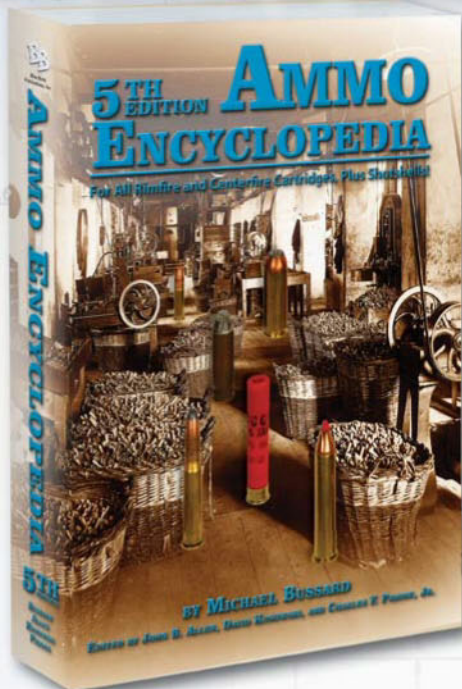

Winchester developed the WSM (Winchester Short Magnum) line of ammo and WSSM (Winchester Super Short Magnum), which are stout bottlenecked cartridges that use a fatter column of powder to achieve similar ballistics as Winchester's magnum cartridges with less recoil and chambered in short actions.

Super X Power Point bullets and Silver Tip bullets have been part of every deer hunter's vernacular for over a century. Today there's the Power Max Bonded for high weight retention with massive expansion. Lead-free bullets like Super X Power Core have a solid copper alloy with a power-core cavity that expands to nearly twice the bullet diameter.

Winchester has been making .22 rimfire ammo for almost as long as it's been around, including noise reduction rounds and shot for cottonmouths. In 1959 the .22 WMR debuted. The .22 Magnum is the name it's given since then, and to this day is popular with varmint hunters. Accuracy is close to 1 MOA and it's offered in a variety of bullet weights, from 28 to 45 grains. It also hits harder than a .22 LR, making it better suited for coyotes. In 2013, the .17 Winchester Super Magnum (WSM) was introduced, pushing a 20-grain bullet at a velocity of 3,000 fps. GDTM

Roy Weatherby believed that speed kills, and his cartridge designs helped start the magnum revolution of the last century. In 2015, the company he started celebrates 70 years in business.

BRAD FITZPATRICK

The King of Speed

In the 1940s, Maj. Charles Askins clung to the notion that big, slow bullets did a fine job killing game; he wrote an article to that effect in Sports Afield in 1945, condemning what he called a “mania for speed.” Askins was one of the nation’s most respected outdoor writers, so it took some pluck for an insurance salesman from California to write an article denouncing Askins’ claims.

The author of that letter was Roy Weatherby, and as it turned out, the insurance guy from Huntington Park had a better handle on the future of cartridge design than the venerated Major. Weatherby was destined to play an integral role in the “mania for speed” that would soon sweep the nation.

Weatherby’s 1945 letter to Sports Afield prompted sympathetic readers to flood the magazine with mail in support of his rebuttal, and it was the same year Weatherby started his own business for re-chambering rifles to accommodate the rounds he had developed. Although he had no formal training in cartridge development, Weatherby had a vision for what he wanted to accomplish.

Resources were scarce, and initially he had to engineer a homemade chronograph that required 15 to 20 minutes to get readings for a single round. There was also a financial challenge involved with starting a new company, and Weatherby had to work hard in the early years to keep his company solvent. But his goals were clear: He believed that the American shooting public was ready for a line of high-speed cartridges and he wanted his name on the headstamp.

Weatherby used the .300 H&H

Mag. case as a starting point, blowing out the cartridge’s gently sloping case to reduce body taper and adding a double-radius shoulder. This design was to become the basis for Weatherby’s first magnum cartridge, the .270 Wby. Mag., which drove a .277-inch projectile about 200 feet per second faster than the vaunted .270 Win. That boost in speed translated into a flatter trajectory and more downrange energy. The public took note, and Weatherby’s name became synonymous with high-speed cartridges.

The Big V

By the end of the 1940s, Weatherby had a line of cartridges that included the .257, .270, 7mm, .300 and .375, a battery that was sufficient for hunting the world over. More cartridges would follow, but by the 1950s Weatherby had tired of relying on overseas manufacturers to provide rifles chambered for his cartridges. In 1955, he began selling his own bolt-action rifle, the Mark V.

Weatherby wanted a bolt action that was incredibly safe, a rifle that would protect the shooter in the event of a case rupture. Since Weatherby's magnum cartridges operated at high pressures, the rifle was designed with safety as top priority. The Mark V had three rings of steel surrounding the cartridge base (recessed bolt face, receiver and barrel), and it also featured nine front-locking lugs as opposed to the two lugs found on most rifles.

The fluted bolt body was the same diameter as the locking lugs, and this virtually eliminated slop and play when working the bolt.

Nine locking lugs reduced bolt lift from 90 to 54 degrees, protecting knuckles from hard thumps against scopes and allowing for faster follow-up shots. In a time when production rifles came from the factory with abysmal triggers, the Mark V offered a clean, crisp break. The rocker-type safety was well positioned, and the Mark V was a very accurate rifle.

Weatherby sold his Mark V rifles with superb high-gloss California Claro walnut stocks with a rosewood forend, grip caps and maple spacers, and they all shared the same classic high Monte Carlo stock profile that's still seen on current Mark V rifles. With the birth of the Mark V, Weatherby finally had the right vehicle for his high-octane rifle cartridges.

It didn't hurt Weatherby sales that several prominent 20th-century celebrities were outspoken fans of his rifles and cartridges, including notable characters like Ernest Borgnine, John Wayne, Chuck Connors, Lorne Green, Gene Autry, Dodgers owner Walter O'Malley and a host of other actors, politicians and foreign royalty. Weatherby and his rifles became en vogue, and that panache still surrounds the brand 70 years after production began.

The Lineup

Over the last seven decades, The Weatherby cartridge lineup has filled every measurable power gap. Although rarely seen in the field, Weatherby actually developed two .22 cartridges, the .220 Weatherby Rocket, which was based on a .220 Swift case, and the

WEATHERBY...REVOLVERS?

Roy Weatherby is best known for his rifles and cartridges, perhaps less known for his shotguns, but very few people know that Weatherby actually produced four prototype revolvers. These double-action revolvers are currently on display at the Weatherby factory in Paso Robles, California. The cost of production precluded Weatherby from ever selling the double-actions, so none were ever released to the public. The four revolvers had walnut grips and blued finishes with full-length underlugs. They are on display with several other collectible Weatherby firearms, including Roy Weatherby's own Mark V with ornate wood, beautiful engraving and plenty of real gold inlays. In addition, there are early prototypes of Weatherby's collectible Compact Firing Platform (CFP), a bolt-action handgun with a reduced Mark V action and a 15-inch barrel. The CFP has something of a cult following among handgun hunters, and when chambered in cartridges like the .243 it was effective on big game.

.224 Wby. Mag., a rare belted .22.

Introduced in 1968, the .240 Wby. Mag. drives a 100-grain bullet 400 feet per second faster than the .243 Win., and today's tough bullets have made it a certain killer on anything from woodchucks to mule deer and sheep. Recoil is moderate, and the .240 is the only Weatherby Magnum that employs a lighter six-lug bolt. Having seen the cartridge employed on a variety of game from deer to pigs and antelope, I certainly rank it among my favorite cartridges of all time, a 6mm death ray that produces moderate recoil.

I'm not alone in my love of the .240 Wby. Mag., and there are many other rifle cranks I've spoken to who consider it among the most underrated cartridges of our time. Weatherby himself had a special affinity for the .257 Wby. Mag., and preferred the 100-grain bullets at about 3,600 fps, generating .30-06 energy levels with a much flatter trajectory. To prove just how effective the .257 Wby. Mag. was, Roy employed it on a Cape buffalo hunt. He survived; the buffalo did not.

The .270 Wby. Mag. was the first commercial Weatherby Magnum, and it's still one of the finest, thanks in large part to the wide selection of .277-inch bullets.

The same can be said for the powerful 7mm Wby. Mag., which predates the popular 7mm Remington Mag. by 20 years and offers very similar ballistics, making it a superb all-around cartridge for big-game hunting.

Game at Extended Ranges

The king of the Weatherby lineup, at least in terms of popularity, is the .300 Wby. Mag., which outpaces the .300 Win. Mag. and utilizes popular .308-inch bullets. Weatherby used the cartridge to hunt the largest and most dangerous game in Africa and the U.S., and it worked fine, but the .300's great talent is that it can take a wide variety of game at extended ranges and produces a level of recoil that, while not light, is within the recoil limits of most experienced shooters.

In the 1990s, Weatherby began chambering Mark V rifles for the powerful .30-378 Wby. Mag., which is based on a .378 Wby. Mag. case necked down to accept a .308-inch bullet. The .30-378 propels a 165-grain bullet at 3,500 fps.

After Roy's retirement, his son Ed took the reins of the company and has guided it successfully for over two decades. Ed's son, Adam, is also acting COO. It marks three generations since the "first family of fast" has overseen the company, but it's still very much a family-run operation. GDTM

THE EVER-CHANGING PERFECT CARTRIDGE

A writer's evolution in his search for the ideal big-game cartridge

JON R. SUNDRA

Long ago in a galaxy far, far away...

Actually, it wasn't that long ago or far away that I had a conversation with Jack O'Connor at what I believe was the last Remington Writers' Seminar he attended before his death in January of 1978. So I'm talking early to mid-70s. We were discussing rifle cartridges, and of course Jack's beloved .270 immediately came up.

Basically, what Jack told me was that he kinda regretted that so many of his readers so closely associated him with the .270. A lot of it was his fault, he said, because he had written so glowingly about it, but he told me he considered the 7mm Remington Magnum better, and the .30-06 more versatile. What he regretted was that whenever he'd say something to that effect, his readers reacted like he was committing heresy. "It's like I'm not allowed to change my mind, even though technology is constantly bringing us new guns and new cartridges."

That conversation with Jack comes to mind whenever I write about how my idea of the perfect cartridge has evolved over the years. By "perfect" I mean perfect for me. I must confess that my 50-year odyssey has been remarkably consistent – some would say boringly so, in that it has been limited almost exclusively to one caliber, the 7mm. But that is not without the perspective and field experience garnered having used every game caliber from 6mm to .416 on game ranging from groundhogs to elephants.

Why 7mm, and not .30 or .270? It was simply a nonempirical conclusion I had come to in my late teens and early 20s, based on having devoured every gun magazine in print for a period of four or five years. I literally had the ballistics charts memorized! No one writer had any more influence on me than another, but it was 1962 when Remington rolled out its 7mm Magnum that my love affair with the bore size began. I want to say that under different circumstances, I could just as easily have become a .30-caliber guy, but that wouldn't be truthful. At that time the 7mm was still considered a "foreign" caliber and hadn't achieved much acceptance here in .30-caliber America. I guess that's why I was so predisposed to it.

It's not like I didn't have experience with other calibers at the time, but what I did have was very limited. Unlike many of my colleagues who grew up on farms or ranches where they were able to start shooting and hunting at an early age, I had no such opportunities growing up on Cleveland's east side. It was not until graduating from high school and getting my driver's license that I was able to get out into the hinterlands of northern Ohio and hunt groundhogs. During a 3½-year hiatus between high school and college I had managed to scrape up enough money to have acquired a Marlin Levermatic in .256 Win. Magnum. I eventually replaced the Marlin with a Remington 722 in .257 Roberts, and soon thereafter had it rebarreled to .22-250, which was a wildcat at the time. By then I was an avid handloader.

Also by then, 1961, I had entered Ohio State University and was in the process of putting together a 6mm Remington. Maybe it was just my natural contrariness, but the .243 Winchester was all the rage in those days as being the perfect dual-purpose caliber. I, however, saw the floundering .244 Rem./6mm Rem. as the superior cartridge, assuming it was built on a standard-length action, fitted with a 1:10-inch twist barrel, and throated to allow seating 100-grain bullets out where they belonged. Which is what I did. I bought a commercial Mauser action and had Flaig's in Millvale, Pa. barrel it for me. I then stocked it myself using a Fajen Regent semishaped and inletted stock. I couldn't realistically plan on hunting anything but deer for at least awhile after gradua-

Market Trends

New, used, collectible, plus ammunition and accessories—if it's selling and it's hot, we'll tell you about it here.

By BRIAN MCCOMBIE

Huge Demand for Reloading Equipment Exceeding Supplies

Grayson Pare — Gamaliel Shooting Supply, Gamaliel, Ky., gamaliel.com

At Gamaliel Shooting Supply, the demand for reloading components has been extremely strong since early 2013, and Grayson Pare, Gamaliel's sales and marketing manager, doesn't see it slackening off one bit in 2015.

"Powder is still the hardest of all reloading components to get," Pare noted. "We are roughly a year behind on filling powder backorders and we do not anticipate that getting much better in 2015. The good news is, primers of all sorts have gotten much easier to keep in stock, and supplies of bullets, brass and shot have gotten better as well."

Spring turkey hunters have bought many new shotguns. Benelli is the top seller here, with the Super Black Eagle II being the most popular model at prices in the $1,700 to $1,800 range, depending on whether a customer wants the black or the camouflage finish. "We also sell a lot of Benelli Super Novas, Stoeger P3500 shotguns and Remington 870s in the lower price points," Pare added.

Turkey hunters are snapping up the new Winchester Long Beard XR turkey shotshells, at $18.95 to $24.95 per box.

The fastest growing market here, though, is for suppressors.

"Customers are beginning to learn more about the legalities of owning suppressors and many states have legalized hunting with suppressors," Pare said. "Most customers are looking to buy suppressors that are versatile, so we sell a lot of 7.62mm suppressors like the SilencerCo Saker 762 that can be used on anything from .223 rifles to .300 Win. Mag."

Intensive Bidding on Some Surprising Guns at RIA

Pat Hogan — Rock Island Auction Co., Rock Island, Ill., rockislandauction.com

At its most recent 2015 auction for firearms and related items, Rock Island Auctions (RIA) sold over 7,000 items, on over 20,000 sealed bids plus another 3,700 phone bids, for an auction total of $5.6 million in sales, noted owner Pat Hogan.

One of the auction's surprises was the intense back-and-forth bidding for a gold-finished Auto Ordnance Corp Thompson Model 1927 A1 semi-automatic rifle that came with its own drum mag and "violin" case. A phone bidder and an Internet bidder duked it out, with the Internet bidder taking the Thompson for $5,175.

Colt "snake guns"—those high-quality Colt revolvers with names like Python and Boa—continued to shine, with a pair of popular Colt Diamondbacks easily exceeding its high estimate and selling for $4,025.

Classic collectibles did well, too, at this RIA auction, including a Civil War Henry rifle, which sold for $25,875, and a scarce Smith & Wesson model 320 Revolving Rifle, with a 16-inch barrel, that pulled in $12,650. Also, an Ulrich engraved, silver-plated Winchester 1866 rifle accompanied by its factory letter crossed the auction block at $25,875.

The Influence of "American Sniper" Seen at Gun Auctions

Dave Bushing — Morphy Auctions, Denver, Pa., morphyauctions.com

At its most recent sales event, Morphy's Auction saw a huge amount of interest in a Remington Model 40 sniper rifle of the type used by the U.S. Marine Corps in Vietnam. The rifle came with its original case and documentation, and it was no surprise that veteran collectors were eager to acquire the rifle. But many of the bids were from newcomers to this segment of the collector's market, and Morphy Auctions firearms division expert Dave Bushing gave much of the credit to Hollywood.

"The sniper rifle appealed to a whole other breed of collector," he noted. "Because of the movie American Sniper, a lot more people are getting into this category who may not have been gun collectors before."

Those new collectors helped drive the price of this rifle to just shy of its pre-auction estimate of $26,400.

A much earlier sniper rifle went for a very strong price, too. The auction featured a rare Sharps New Model 1859, one of 2,000 such rifles issued in 1862 to Hiram Berdan's 1st and 2nd Regiments of the U.S. Sharpshooters. Its serial number fell within the range confirmed to have been used in the Civil War by a specially organized sniper unit documented in many articles and books. Accompanied by a Springfield Research letter, the rifle went for $10,800.

What Bushman terms "the blue chips" of gun collecting—Winchester lever-action rifles—held up their end, too. Among the best sellers were a Winchester rifle Model 1873 in .44 caliber and manufactured in 1892, for $8,400; and a .405 caliber Model 1895 made famous by Teddy Roosevelt and nicknamed "Big Medicine," for $7,800.

Smaller SIG and Kimber Handguns for the Growing Concealed Carry Market

Don Hanna — Portland Gun Store, Clackamas, Ore., PortlandGunStore.com

Smaller, concealed carry handguns are in big demand here at Portland Gun Store, according to manager Don Hanna. "I sell more Sig P238's than anything else," he said. "SIG has come out with some awesome finishes, like gold and high polish colors that appeal to the ladies and the collectors, both of which continue to be a growing market."

A newcomer in the small handgun market is also making the cash register sing: the Kimber Micro 380.

"We're finally starting to get all the different Micro models in stock," Hanna added. "The black and stainless models sell for $649. The CDP and others with night sights are $879. Consumers seem to be appreciating the higher quality models and willing to pay for them."

Entry-level ARs are moving once again, and Hanna believes he knows why.

"The high-end ARs were popular for a time, but became so hard to get, I think consumers stopped trying to get them." There's also a good deal of interest in long-range tactical bolt-action rifles topped with tactical scopes. He credited the interest to the movie American Sniper.

Handguns Sales Making For a Profitable Bottom Line

Wade Adams — Blade, Barrel and Reel Outdoors, Georgetown, S.C., bbroutdoors.com

The big seller recently at Blade, Barrel and Reel Outdoors, said owner Wade Adams, has been handguns from SCCY Industries of Daytona Beach, Florida, manufacturer of the CPX1 and CPX2 9mm semi-automatic pistols designed for concealed carry.

"We've sold just a ton of them," he said. "Part of that is the price—they only have just the two models and we sell them for $310 and $325. Despite that lower price point, they are a really good-quality handgun and have an amazing lifetime warranty."

Another popular handgun line here is the small bore Rough Rider, from Heritage Manufacturing, a series of revolvers with that Old West look and feel to them. Chambered in .22 LR and .22 Mag., the revolvers start at $175.

Turkey season had locals buying shotguns, but not necessarily turkey-specific models. Benelli, Browning A-5 and various Tri-Star models were selling, Adams noted, almost all of them in 12-gauge. Since most of the buyers were also leaving the store with a box or two of turkey shotshells, he figured they will see some field action this spring.

Adams has also noticed a nice bump in AR-15 sales, which had been down for the longest time, with entry-level models by Del-Ton moving nicely.

"I think they've been on a lot of peoples' wish lists for a while now. And with tax refunds coming in, and lower prices on a number of rifles, guys are deciding now is the time to buy." GDTM

GARY REEDER CUSTOM GUNS is proud to announce another brand new series, something very special. We have been working on the design and build of this gun for almost a year. It is our new Black Mamba.

It is built on the customer's GP-100.

The new MAMBA shown is a 6" revolver chambered in 44 Special but it will also be offered in 41 Magnum, 44 Magnum, 41 GNR and 356 GNR. It has a 6" full underlug vent rib barrel, 5 shot beefy cylinder, full action job, Maxi Throat, Deep Dish Crown and our satin Vapor Honed stainless finish. It has a set of deluxe Hogue finger groove grips on it and comes sighted in and ready to go. The new Black Mamba is also available in our deluxe Black Chromex or two toned. The new Black Mamba is available in barrel lengths up to 8". Four month delivery in most cases. For one of the classiest double action revolvers on the market today, check out our new BLACK MAMBA. As usual, one third down and we begin work on your new BLACK MAMBA.

This M21 has all the Grand American features as shown in the accompanying G. A. catalog including several items of note. The wood is exhibition grade and Pistol Grip with L.O.P. 14-1/2". The engraving and gold-work is meticulous. It has the "early style" gun case which is in fine condition. This M21 is a phenomenal piece of Master Gun-Smithery in all respects. Mfg. 1969, a Winchester Repeating Arms Co. M21. Please call.

M21-Symbol G2122B-20ga. Skeet Grade, bbl 28" raised matted rib, bored W.S.-1 & W.S.-2. Non-Automatic Safety, single trigger, select ejectors, pistol grip stock, checkered butt. L.O.P. 14-5/16"-drop at heel 2-1/2"-comb 1-1/2"-pitch 1-5/8". Skeet finish, inspection finish date Oct. 29, 1948. A second 410ga. bbl was added, 28" -3" chambers bored W.S.-1 & W.S.-2. All proofs & builder's mark are correct and indicates barrel was done at the factory. Condition 99%, and has the old style leather case with all accessories. A remarkable M21 to say the least from my personal collection. $28,500.

M12-Black Diamond-Trap Grade, and so marked. Complete factory refurbish, including mechanical work, bolt & carrier engine turned. Wood has very nice marble grain & oil finish. L.O.P. 14-1/4" over Solid Red Winchester Pad. Barrel is solid rib, 30" Full. All bbl. & receiver markings are sharp. Mfg. date 1925. A remarkable M12 with old style Leg-O-Mutton Winchester case. $2,195.

Leg-O-Mutton Winchester Leather Case-Marked Red Head. Made for Winchester and so marked, Model 15W/30" in very good condition. Carry strap in two pieces for Models 12, 21, 42 etc. $175.00

OF ALL TYPES:

- INSERTS FOR BREAK-OPEN SHOTGUNS
- CHAMBER ADAPTER FOR RIFLES
- CHAMBER ADAPTER FOR SPECIALTY PISTOLS
- ANTIQUES & WILDCATS CUSTOM MADE!

These inserts/adapters allow rifle owners to target practice at local indoor ranges where full power loads are prohibited, or take small game without the noise, meat destruction or the expense of full loads. As a survival device, my adapters are unequalled, allowing a single rifle or pistol to fire a variety of ammunition. New shooters will learn marksmanship without fighting recoil and loud muzzle blast.

Important Firearms Auction | October 2015

Our March 2015 Firearms auction was a tremendous success with strong prices across the board. The total low estimate of the items sold came to around $10.5 million but the actual price realized was over $16 Million. Julia's handles more high-end expensive firearms than any other auction house in the world and Julia's sales regularly feature the greater number of high end old-time collections. This auction included 15 important collections. Whether you have one item or an entire collection, please contact us immediately. For nearly 45 years, Julia's has been at the forefront of the auction world. Our sterling reputation for honest and fair dealing, the finest catalogs in the industry, combined with proven results including a great number of world auction records, means the greatest net return to you the consignor. tion, so the 6mm was the ideal caliber for me at that time in my life. It served me well on varmints, predators, white-tails, mule deer and black bear until 1968; by then I had graduated and was living in western Pennsylvania and had made hunting trips to Wyoming, Montana and Quebec.

But, like I said before, it was four years earlier in late 1962 that a seminal moment arrived for me with the introduction of the 7mm Remington Magnum. If the word "sexy" could be applied to a rifle cartridge, this was it. Not only did it look fast, it was fast. The big, belted case pushed a 150-grain bullet out at 3,260 fps. Those were the days when factory ballistics were established in 26-inch barrels, accompanied by a dash of optimism. When 24 inches became the standard in 1970-something, that figure was reduced to 3,100 fps. But then so too were the stats for all other commercial cartridges, so the performance edge over popular rounds like the .270 and .30-06 was still there. I was so enamored with the cartridge that I doodled pictures of it in the margins of my college textbooks. I still have one of those books.

By the time I made what I considered my first genuine big-game hunt—a caribou hunt in Labrador in 1968—I had built up my first of what would eventually be four 7mm Mags. The first was on a BSA action from Herter's; one was a stock Ruger No. 1B; one was on a Sako action; and yet another was on a Carl Gustaf barreled action.

By the mid '70s and after having made my first African hunt, I became disenchanted with the 7mm Mag., but not because it failed me in any way. On the contrary, everything I pointed it at simply dropped either in its tracks or within a short distance. And I'm talking big stuff like kudu, gemsbok, hartebeest and zebra. It just reaffirmed my belief that for anything short of dangerous game, a 7mm bullet of 140 to 160 grains, depending on the critter, was enough gun. Whether or not I realized it at the time, I had developed a minimalist attitude about cartridges. I never wanted to be undergunned, but packing a .300 Magnum for deer or a .375 for elk simply didn't appeal to me, even though it would have completely eliminated any questions about cartridge adequacy.

Nope, the reason I became disenchanted with the 7 Mag was because I believed the belted case, which had become so synonymous with magnums in those days, had outlived its usefulness. Its whole raison d'être was to provide a definitive forward surface for purposes of headspace, nothing more.

Back around the turn of the 20th century, large-caliber cartridges had long, sloping shoulders that precluded their use as a datum line for headspacing. Rimmed cases were the answer, but with the emergence of Mauser's box magazine, the rimmed cases of the day would not allow cartridges to slide against one another. The belt, which only protrudes .010" was enough to provide a definite stopping surface for a chambered cartridge, yet not enough to impede cartridge feed from magazine to chamber.

For the nonhandloader, the presence of a belt makes absolutely no difference whatsoever, but from the handloading standpoint, a beltless case is actually better for minor technical reasons we haven't the space to go into here.

In 1978 I again left for Africa, this time with a standard .280 Remington. It wasn't quite the equal of the 7 Mag, but I felt the 150 fps difference was no big thing. Again, everything I pointed it at dropped—kudu, gemsbok, zebra, wildebeest, etc., and nothing required tracking.

In 1979 I had a Ruger Model 77 barreled in .284 Winchester, a case I always thought to be of superior design. It was the first commercial cartridge to use a 35-degree shoulder, which I thought was ideal. I, of course, based it on a standard length rather than a short action, and had it throated accordingly. Unfortunately, I learned the .284's severely rebated rim can cause feeding problems in a staggered-row box magazine. The rifle was finished at the last minute and I didn't have time to really test its feeding reliability before leaving for Africa. That little oversight almost got me eaten by a lion, but for all the other plains game in Zambia, it performed with typical 7mm lethality, including a 1,500-pound eland that dropped after running only 40 yards.

Two years earlier, in preparation for my first safari to Rhodesia, Cape buffalo was on the agenda and for that chore I wanted to use a .375. But I didn't like the fact that the H&H version, with its sloping case body and slight shoulder, didn't take full advantage of the available case capacity. Just as I was about to decide between the old .375 Weatherby and the wildcat .375 Mashburn, Remington announced its 8mm Rem. Magnum. Suddenly I had a readily available "improved" H&H case, i. e., with a minimum body taper and a sharp shoulder. I simply necked it up from .323 to .375. Thus was born the 375 JRS.

The rifle I chose was another Ruger No. 1 in .375 H&H, which I simply had rechambered. That cartridge was capable of pushing a 300-grain bullet close to 2,700 fps, which was a damn sight better than the 2,530 the H&H could deliver. I have since come to favor the .375 Ruger as the best medium-bore cartridge for all African big game, with the exception of elephant. It will do everything my .375 JRS can do and then some, and in a standard-length action. It would also be my choice for Alaska's big bears.

Upon returning from my first safari to Zambia, where I used the aforementioned .284 Win., I decided to go back to the .280 Remington, but an improved version thereof, the .280 RCBS. However, I immediately realized that simply improving the .280 Rem. case — reducing the body taper and sharpening the shoulder — increased case capacity by just a couple of grains, which translated to a scant 50 fps over the stock .280. So I set out to design another wildcat to take maximum advantage of the .280 case.

Starting with the stock .280 Remington case, I simply specified to the Clymer people to cut me a reamer that would result in a case that would have a .015-inch body taper, and extend a 35-degree shoulder forward to where I'd have a .300-inch neck. The net result was a case that had about 6 percent greater capacity than the .280 Ackley Improved.

Over the next decade I built three rifles, one on a Remington 700 action, one on a Sako and one on a Model 70. All have magazines long enough that I could seat bullets up to 160 grains to where there was very little infringement on powder space. All were throated accordingly and all three would yield 3,100 fps with a 150-grain bullet from a 24-inch barrel. I used those guns almost exclusively for the next decade to take game on four continents.

By the early 1990s, beltless cases of magnum capacity finally came upon the scene. Most were based on an improved version of the British .404 Jeffery case, which had a head diameter of .540-.550, with slightly rebated rims of .532, so that they matched existing belted magnum bolt faces. Imperial Cartridge of Canada was the first to offer a line of cartridges based on such a case, followed by Dakota Arms and John Lazzeroni. All required either standard or magnum-length actions. I soon had a Ruger No. 1 barreled in 7mm Dakota, then rebarreled again in the mid-90s to Lazzeroni's short-action 7.21 Tomahawk. John was the first to introduce a line of short, belt-less magnums, preceding Winchester by several years.

All the aforementioned machinations were the result of my searching for what could be the perfect cartridge for me. That search came to an end in 2001 when Winchester introduced its .300 WSM (Winchester Short Magnum). Before you could buy a Winchester Model 70 or Browning A-Bolt chambered in .300 WSM, I had necked it down to 7mm and soon thereafter took it to Africa in 2002. Winchester, of course, rolled out its 7mm version that same year.

When I said “could be” the perfect cartridge, the factory-loaded WSMs do not bring out the full potential of the case because they’re all factory loaded to a cartridge length of 2.8 inches to fit the magazines of your typical short magnum action. As such, even medium-weight bullets (150 grain in 7mm) have to be seated to where they seriously infringe on usable powder space. Every millimeter the base of the bullet juts down into otherwise usable powder space, you in effect make the case smaller than it is. Being the efficiency weenie I am, that has always been unacceptable.

Now there are many who would say, just barrel any standard-length action and as a handloader you can seat the pills as shallow as you want. But then there are others who would say that in doing so you defeat the whole premise behind the short magnum. Both are legitimate concerns.

What’s required, then, to realize the full potential of any short magnum is the perfect action; one with a bolt stroke and magazine length that allows optimal bullet seating. Thankfully, there are two: Winchester’s own short Model 70 and the Montana Rifle Company’s Model 1999, which is a hybrid version of the Winchester. Both have magazines that allow overall cartridge lengths of 3-1/8 inches. I’ve owned several such 7mm WSM rifles, some based on standard-length actions as well, all throated accordingly, and all were able to coax 3,150 fps for 150-grain bullets through 24-inch barrels.

For more than 10 years now, nothing has come along that has made me change my concept of the perfect cartridge, but even at that, it takes a specific rifle to make it so. How can you get any nebbier than that!

I, of course, continue to field and bench test every new rifle and cartridge that does come along, but like I said, nothing thus far has changed my mind. Sure, there are more potent 7mms and .30s out there, but maximum velocity has never been my criteria. If it were, I’d be shooting the 7mm Ultra Mag. No, there’s more to it than that.

To me, cartridge efficiency, case design, bullet selection, trajectory, energy retention, all contribute to the equation. When I punch in all those factors and hit compute, for me it comes out 7mm WSM every time. GDTM

The factory 7mm WSM at left is loaded to the maximum overall cartridge length of 2.8 inches. Next to it is a Hornady 154 gr. SST and a 150 gr. Barnes TSX. Note how deeply they must be seated to fit a short action. At right is the length accepted by the Winchester and Montana short actions.
